The WWII Battle of Midway June 4-7, 1942

Midway Atoll, 1,300 miles northwest of Hawaii, was vital during WWII as a refueling point and became the site of a pivotal U.S. - Japan battle. The Imperial Japanese Navy spent more than a year preparing for a strategy it believed would bait the Americans to fight and lose there, giving Japan unquestioned superiority in the Pacific. On the first day of the battle, it seemed Japan had won. But in the few days that followed, America prevailed and forever changed the course of the war in the Pacific.
